Breeding Quality Genetics
Into Your Herd's
Next Generation

Advance your breeding program ...

The herdsire for any breeding program is the single most important determinant of overall herd quality; whether cattle, horses or alpacas. For a breeder to be certain of the genetic traits being introduced into his cria, careful selection from available living studs is critical to ensure certain breed traits are passed on to their offspring.

Our goal at BrushWalker Alpacas is to produce generation after generation of animals superior to the last through careful selection of our herdsires. To that end, we have selected only the highest quality males, those who have been progeny tested in the field or are from progeny tested sires to be one of our AmericasPremier™ Herdsires. We take into account all the characteristics of their fleece, the presence they exhibit and their pedigrees ... we look at conformation traits such as bite, bone density, size and movement.

We believe when you decide on one of our AmericasPremier™ you are making an investment in the quality of your alpaca breeding program. Whether you are breeding just one, or your whole herd, you are acquiring some of the best genetics available. Remember a sire's worth is his ability to pass his genotype to his progeny.

One look at his picture and you understand why people appreciate this magnificent male! Capitan's Carelton quite simply speaks for himself! He has all the things that contribute to make up a great herdsire; beautiful color, a tremendous amount of dense fleece that is full of crimp and luster, immense bone structure and outstanding conformation. He is quite macho, yet he is probably the most gentle alpaca on the farm.

His father, PERUVIAN ACCOYO CAPITAN, a full Peruvian Accoyo, was the highest selling Huacaya at the Westward Alpacas auction and "Carelton" is definitely his father's son! This guy is an easy breeder and settled his first females this year. We are expecting some spectacular crias in 2007 from this guy!
